

Meet our ECMC Research Nurses: Alison Pass, Sheffield ECMC

Being an ECMC Nurse...

is exciting and rewarding. To see a novel treatment have an effect on a disease is the most rewarding part of my job; to know that I have had a small part in that process is the best feeling.

The most challenging part of the role...

is getting poorly patients onto a study. Time sometimes moves too fast and the cohort/study closes or disease progresses too quickly.

The most rewarding element...

happens during the first CT scan of a patient on a novel therapy and the smile on their faces.

“I work with some amazing patients who inspire me with their patience and willingness to undertake the trials I work on”

I became a nurse...

because I wanted to care for people at a time when they couldn't care for themselves in order to help them regain independence.

My advice to those considering becoming a nurse...

is to question everything, review patient safety at all times and ensure that the patient remains your only focus!
